05 September 2015 – 10.00 am -3.00 pm

IRISH MEDICAL ORGANISATION
Ceardchumann Dochtúirí na hÉireann

Even though the medical profession is getting increasingly specialised, General Practitioners are the essential backbone of the health care system. Well-functioning networks must be installed to satisfy the population's needs for basic medical services, which are easy accessible and available on a broad base. Therefore the EJD and the IMO are hosting this workshop, to elaborate the differences in GP's services all over Europe and discuss further options and possibilities for improving these systems in the future.

Programme

- 10.00 – 10.30 Welcome & Opening
Dr. Ray Walley (IMO President) / Carsten Mohrhardt (EJD President)
- 10.30 – 11.00 The Irish GP and GP Training System
Dr Rukshan Goonewardena, (IMO NCHD Committee & Former Chair NAGPT)
Dr Goonewardena provides an overview of the particularities of GP training and the GP system in Ireland.
- 11.00 – 11.30 What do GP's in Europe do?
Monica Teran (Spain, EJD UEMO liaison officer)
Medical training of General Practitioner's in Europe is comparable, even though it varies in length and content. To better understand these variations it is important to evaluate which services are provided by GP's on national level, e.g. if child- or maternity care is include within the GP practice and therefore part of the curriculum.

- 11.30 – 12.00 Chronic disease management in reality
Anne-Eva Speeks (Netherlands, President of LOVAH)
Carsten Mohrhardt (Germany, President of the EJD)
The leading cause of mortality and morbidity in Europe are chronic diseases such as diabetes, cardio vascular disease, depression and many more. Recent studies show that up to 50% of the European population are suffering of at least one chronic disease, therefore proper management of these patients will be a challenge in the future.
- 12.00 – 13.00 Clusters & assessments – a new approach in Hungary
Gergely Fürjes (Hungary, Deputy Chief of Program)
In 2012 a pilot project to restructure primary care in Hungary was launched. One of the basic goals was to improve health services provide by GPs and other professionals in disadvantaged regions. Therefore four so called GP clusters were implemented, all of them in regions where access to health and prevention services was limited for the population. A core element of the new primary care system is the health assessment of the population in the intervention area to determinate the health status of the individual.
- 12.30 – 13.30 Lunch Break
- 13.30 – 14.00 How e-Health improves primary care
Raquel Gomez Bravo (Luxembourg, Vasco da Gama Movement)
- 14.00 – 14.30 Training in Practice Management
Anne-Eva Speeks (Netherlands, President of LOVAH)
Implementing management and leadership skills in postgraduate training is a core demand of the EJD for some years. These skills are especially needed when the self-employed contractor model is a standard model for GP service provision. Training in practice management is available in some countries, like in the Netherlands, and can serve as a template for others.
- 14.30 – 15.00 Discussion & Conclusions
Dr. Ray Walley (IMO President) / Carsten Mohrhardt (EJD President)
